

THE WILLOUGHBY HILLS COMMUNITY CENTER ART GALLERY

ANNOUNCES A NEW GALLERY CURATOR

We are pleased to announce that Lee Tobin is the new curator of the Willoughby Hills Community Center Art Gallery. Lee is replacing John Davis who left Willoughby Hills and moved to Cleveland where he is once again doing his art and mingling with other area artists on a daily basis, and has opened his own gallery.

Lee is a freelance photographer working in portraiture, fine art photography, and photographic restoration. Her background is in photography, watercolor, drawing, graphic design, Photoshop instruction, and writing children's books. Lee studied photography, art and design at Lakeland Community College and watercolor with watercolor artist, Layne Kendig. She participates in the Gates Mills and the Annual Fairmount Art Exhibition art shows. Her published works include photographs taken for Tamron Lens marketing materials, and two children's books written and illustrated: "The Princesses Gown" and "Oh Brothers, Stuff and Stories".

"As the artist behind the camera I shoot and process my photographs using all of today's digital tools. I direct the focus with selective color and lighting to create impact and interest. This creative process reflects my vision of the photograph as it was originally captured, while presenting it in its best light.....small changes, big impact." "An easy walk down this creative path often leads me to the creation of digital photographic art. A place where there are no limits or pre-defined formulas that determine the final result. These are some of my favorite creations as they are Art as only the individual creating it can determine what it's outcome will be."
